LOW FREIGHT RATES.

Due in Germany to Canal and River Transportation.

Hamburg, the most important port in Germany, is especially well located as a distributing point, not only for Baltic trade, but for interior Germany as well. From Hamburg for distribution to central Germany and a broad belt of territory extending southeasterly across the empire, there are available the Elbe river and its tributaries and connecting canals during the season of open navigation. These afford exceedingly low rates of freight, and the barges and small craft employed are numbered by the thousand.

Bremen, the second port of Germany in size and importance, commands, by way of the Weser river and its branches and connecting canals, the territory west of that covered by Hamburg in the northwestern part of Germany.

The populous and productive portion of the empire, lying south and southwest of that tributary to Hamburg and Bremen, is reached by way of Rotterdam, Holland, and thence up the Rhine to Mannheim, Germany, and other river cities for distribution, as mentioned, by canal and river tributaries.

Stettin, an important port for north central Germany, reaches a stretch of territory up the Oder river of great importance, extending quite half-way across the country.

Danzig, or Neufahrwasser as the port is called, lying to the east of Stettin, has an influential hold on the northeastern quarter of Germany through its location at the mouth of Weichsel. Koenigsberg-Pillau, still further east, controls the extreme northeastern section.

While all these ports have rail connections to all parts of the empire, such commodities as grain and feeding stuffs are preferably shipped by barges and canal boats, because of greater convenience in loading at ports of entry, and the cheaper freight rates that are available for all but two or three months in the year. The extent of Germany's barge and canal traffic is not to be underrated, since it plays a most important part in transportation, reaching as it does nearly every portion of the empire.—United States Consular Reports.

A CLEAN POULTRY HOUSE.

The poultry house should be kept clean at all times, but it is especially important that it be given a thorough cleaning and disinfecting before closing up for the winter. The whole interior should be whitewashed, adding about one-half pint of crude carbolic acid to each gallon of wash. Care should be taken that the lime is forced into every crack and crevice. All old litter and nesting material should be removed and burned, and new supplied; the roosts and dropping-boards should be painted with some good liquid lice-killer, a new dust-bath should be supplied, and in fact a general cleaning up is necessary if the fowls are going to be comfortable and profitable.—Farmers' Home Journal.

Blind Workers in Vienna.

The promoters of the Institution for the Blind in Vienna seem very pleased with the result of the first eight months of its existence. All the workers are blind, and they are engaged in the manufacture of brushes and baskets. Up to the present about 23,000 kronen worth of orders have been executed, say something like $4,000, and a fair profit has been realized. The society has now under consideration the proposal to enlarge the workshops. The wares are put upon the market in fair competition with the product of other kindred factories.—Philadelphia Record.

During 1907 the Chinese Government spent nearly $100,000 for students studying in foreign countries. Japan got nearly half the money and the United States about one-fourth.
